- Jeff is a strong believer in the use of video technology combined with athletic movement development to help his students improve. In addition he utilizes a number of skills games designed to help players identify their weaknesses and prepare for on course success by utilizing a more focused approach to practice.

Teaching Philosophy:

My teaching philosophy is based on the fact that every player is an individual with individual swings and playing goals. My job is to match the instruction to meet their golfing goals and show them how making changes to their existing movements can improve their results. I am big believer that once a student can see their swing then they can understand the changes and begin to get a feel for making the new changes work. This is why I utilize video as it enables the player to see in slow motion. I utilize skills games for testing and to make practice more meaningful and fun. The results of these games provide me feedback for establishing the proper instruction and practice program areas that the player must focus to reach the next level.

Teaching Strengths:

I have been fortunate enough to have taught golf full time for the last 26 years. This time has provided me the knowledge and skill to help my students improve. While I work with players of all ages and skills I have spent many years specializing in junior golfers and beginners. My strengths lie in setting up programs for juniors and beginners to follow in order to make sure that they are focused on developing their game correctly.
